YOUR PROBLEMS

by Ann Landers

"Turn Off Your Hearing Aid . . ."

Dear Ann: I've been married 7½ years and can truthfully say I've never cheated on my wife once. But I have a problem that even a thinking man can't filter out.

My wife is so suspicious of me it's driving me nuts. If we walk on the street together and I say hello to a woman from the office my wife says, "What's going on between you two anyway?"

If I put on some hair tonic in the morning she says "Who are you getting spiffed up for?" Once I bought her a box of candy. She said "What are YOU feeling guilty about?" I never go out alone. The only part of my check I see is the stub. I couldn't buy another woman a package of chewing gum. I knew she was jealous when I married her but like a fool I was flattered and thought it was love.

If I were to send you a snapshot of myself you'd say, "How can any woman be jealous of HIM?" I'm nothing to look at and I wear a hearing aid. — S. G.

Dear S. G.: A man who has no money to spend and never goes out alone can't be doing much cheating. But this, of course, is the rational approach, and your wife is emotional.

She was insecure about you even before marriage and will probably always be suspicious. But this is a deficiency in HER and not you. Continue to stay home where you belong, and when she starts to nag turn off the hearing aid. Maybe in time, she'll have enough confidence in herself to trust you.

Dear Ann: The trouble is ME, spelled with foot-high capital letters. I don't know why, but I'm a rotten daughter to my parents.

Around the house I'm a cranky old groch. But with my friends it's a different story. Everyone thinks I'm sweet as honey. I'll be 16 soon and if this is a stage I'm going through it sure is lasting a long time.

My parents are really the greatest. Sometimes I get so mad at myself for treating them mean I could just say, "Please, Ann, tell me how to overcome my sour disposition at home.—MISS MISERABLE."

Dear Miss: Being able to admit that the fault lies with YOU is half the battle. Most people (adults as well as kids)
